Wabun Foundation's Mission:

Transforming Lives Through Wilderness Experience

Wabun foundation seeks to:

- Continue the longstanding Camp Wabun tradition of experiential and structured learning by paddling the waterways of Northern Canada by canoe and fostering the self-discovery inherent in such travel.
- Cultivate respect for and stewardship of the Earth's natural resources.
- Honor and promote travel in traditional ways through the historic territories of the Teme-Augama Anishnabai people.
- Empower confidence, resilience, perseverance, teamwork, and leadership.
- Provide opportunities to leave the distractions of technology behind and educate about the benefits derived from the rewards of hard work, peer fellowship, and incredible beauty.
- Create meaningful, lasting relationships and connections across generations and diverse communities.
- Be steadfast in our commitment to inclusive programming.
- Make wilderness experiences more accessible through scholarship, financial support, and expanded opportunities.

The stories.

That's what happens when Wabun people gather. They start to flow, and they never really stop.

Not long ago I was on a Zoom call with four of us who paddled the Attawapiskat together in 1976. We traded memories of the fires that summer — watching the water bombers drop into the lake as we paddled out to help — and the rest-day donuts we never quite got to. We talked about shooting the "Steels" on the Dumoine, the first time we tried to tump a load, and the portage that made us swear we'd never come back. We remembered Mistassini in every kind of weather.

These stories are full of humor and nostalgia, but they also restore something deeper: a sense of community and shared purpose that so many of us spend our lives trying to recreate at home and at work. A great day at Wabun becomes a standard we aspire to.

Honoring those stories — and the people who gave them to me, and to Gail, Jesse, and Aaron — is a big reason I give to the Wabun Foundation. Stokey, Whitey, Dick J, Nibby, Anne, Dick III, Marg, John Murphy, Pete Spiller, John Bellaire, Tom Woodman, Pete Gwyn, Bill Green. The list is long, and I'm grateful to all of them.

I also give to keep Wabun within reach for everyone. In my day, a camper could earn much of a season's tuition with a winter job; a college student could cover part of a year's expenses on staff; a teacher could supplement a year's income at camp. The world has changed, but these traditions are worth protecting.

And I give for the generations still to come — so my granddaughter can paddle these waters in about a decade, and one day, perhaps, her children too. Our founders had a vision in 1933. We are fortunate to carry it forward.

Thank you for your ongoing support, and for helping keep the red and white waving proudly over Garden Island.

With gratitude,

Hardin Coleman
Board Chair, The Wabun Foundation

Letter from the Executive Director

Phoebe Knowles

Dear Friend of Wabun,

Earlier this year Camp Director, Jess Lewis, passed along an open letter that had made the rounds at one of our Open Houses. Written by Alex Kotran, founder of the AI Education Project, it was titled A Letter to a Rising Senior: What the AI Revolution Means for Your Career. I expected the familiar litany of anxieties. Instead, I found myself reading a description of Wabun.

Kotran's argument is bracing and honest. The pace of change is unlike anything we've seen, and no one can tell a young person today what the jobs of their future will look like. What he offers in place of a prediction is guidance. Three capacities, he argues, will matter more than any credential: the ability to take on hard things and see them through, the ability to keep learning quickly and on one's own, and the ability to work with other people through all of the friction that process requires.

Jess put it plainly when she sent it along: this is what Wabun has been doing since 1933.

Accomplishing hard things is the whole substance of a canoe trip. Campers who shoulder a load over a long portage, read weather off the water, and paddle into a headwind for a fourth straight hour are not rehearsing for challenge. They are meeting it, with real consequences and real reward.

Becoming a master learner is what bushcraft demands. Our campers learn by doing: setting a line, reading a map, coaxing a fire out of wet wood, then doing it all again the next season with more skill and less instruction.

Learning to deal with people is the quiet, constant work of a trip. In a section everyone depends on one another. The friction of living and traveling closely with others — navigating disagreement, extending and earning trust — is not a byproduct of Wabun. It is central to the experience.

I share this not because an outside voice validated what we do; it doesn't need validating. I share it because it gave me a new way to name what your generosity makes possible. When you give to the Wabun Foundation, you are not funding a summer's escape from the world. You are funding the formation of young people who will be ready for the world, whatever it becomes.

In the coming pages, you'll see how your support in 2025 impacted Wabun today and beyond.

Thank you for your generous support!

Libby Moore, Wabun Woman

Our mother, Libby, stood at the head of the dining room at the end of the 2015 Wabun season with her new Friends of Wabun hat on. She spoke about the new initiatives Friends of Wabun was working towards, providing scholarships and financial support for Wabun campers – along with other youth wilderness experiences across the US and Canada.

What was unusual about this scene to us, her children, was her willingness to get up and speak in front of a very large crowd; to ask – publicly – for people to pay attention to her, and to this work she believed so strongly in. Libby was the person who shone the spotlight on others. Rarely was a cause worthy enough for her to draw attention to herself in service of its needs, but Friends of Wabun was a worthy cause.

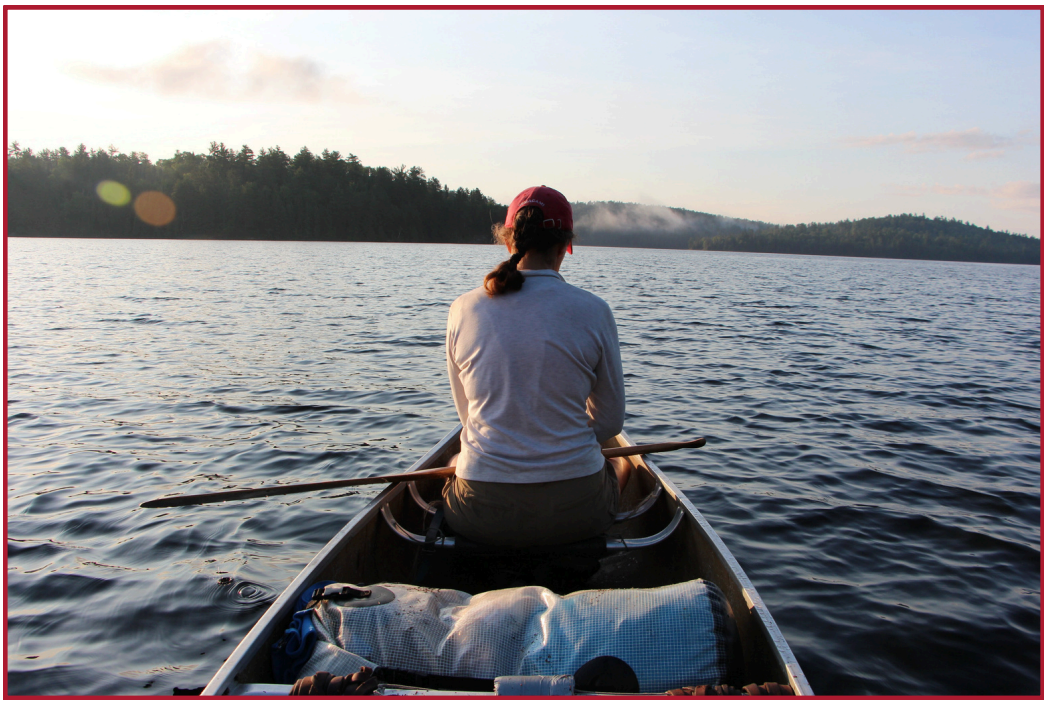

In hindsight, what might've been unusual about this scene to others was that Libby was never a Wabun camper. Her father is on the plaques from 1944 and 1945, but when she was ready to go off to canoe tripping camp, Wabun was not. (Little did they know that Wabun was only a few short years away from women's trips!). Instead, Mom attended Camp Wapomeo in the Algonquin Park, and spent her summers paddling aluminum Grummens canoes.

We still have her 1977 Quetico Trip t-shirt, faded and soft, reading, "37 Days in the Bush… I Finally Found It!" It feels familiar: the inside joke no one else will get, the allusion to a little too much time in the bush, the feeling of achievement accompanying such a journey. We've all been there, 37 days deep in the northern woods, on each of our respective Bay Trips, sharing in this experience our Mom knew well, too.

Donor Spotlight
The Moore Family

In truth, Libby was the ultimate Wabun Woman. One does not need to have been a Wabun camper to embody the spirit of community, adventure, support, and connection that makes Wabun the powerful experience it is for so many each summer! Mom believed deeply in the value of immersive wilderness experience and worked hard to set Wabun up for success long beyond her own ability to have an impact.

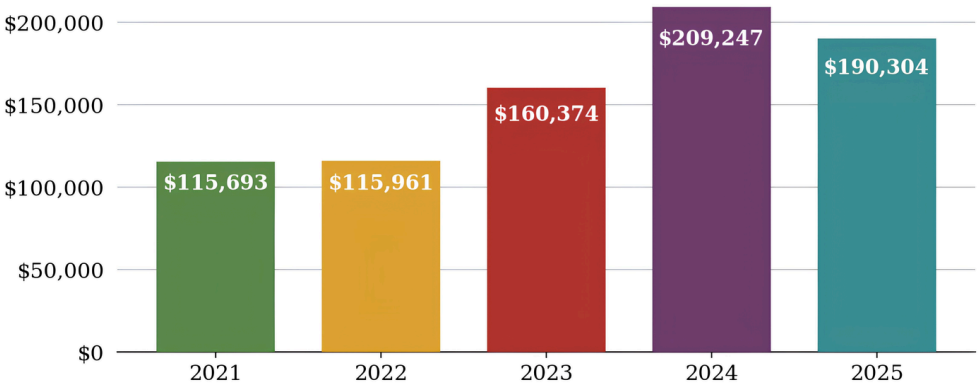

When she passed in 2020, our family's support of Wabun became in honor of Libby and our shared belief in the importance of a summer at Wabun. We remember her work to move Friends of Wabun towards the non-profit Wabun Foundation has become. For us, the celebration of 50 years of girls' canoe tripping at Wabun also celebrates the women who make Wabun possible. Libby was one of them, and we are proud to honor her with the 2025 creation of the Libby Moore Sustaining Fund.

The Libby Moore Sustaining Fund was established by Libby Moore's husband and children to honor her love of Lake Temagami and continue her commitment to the Wabun Foundation's mission to provide youth access to a wilderness canoe tripping experience. In recognition of evolving needs, this fund supports Wabun's greatest needs as circumstances evolve. Gifts to this fund will be managed as if they were permanent endowment funds; however, the Board, in times of emergency, may draw down from the corpus following special votes.

Endowment & Restricted Funds

*Endowment gifts (marked * in the donor list) build a critical foundation of support, securing Wabun's mission for generations to come. The funds are detailed below.*

The Wabun Fund

The Wabun Fund is the financial bedrock upon which Wabun's future sustainability is being built. It is a permanent endowment, the earnings from which may be applied as needed to support the mission of Wabun Foundation and Camp Wabun Canada. The Wabun Fund was established in 2025 by the vision and leadership gifts of the Sullivan McKenna Family, Jon Lindseth, and K.K and Joe Sullivan.

The Libby Moore Sustaining Fund

The Libby Moore Sustaining Fund was established by Libby Moore's husband and children to honor her love of Lake Temagami and continue her commitment to the Wabun Foundation's mission to provide youth access to a wilderness canoe tripping experience. In recognition of evolving needs, this fund supports Wabun's greatest needs as circumstances evolve. Gifts to this fund will be managed as if they were permanent endowment funds; however, the Board, in times of emergency, may draw down from the corpus following special votes.

Gail and Hardin Coleman Family Scholarship Fund

This scholarship fund supports campers, with a preference for candidates who live in Philadelphia, Boston, or other Gateway Cities in Massachusetts.

Reid Parker Capital Improvement Fund

Reid T. Parker was a Wabun camper in 1983 and 1984. The goal of this fund is to support Wabun's enduring viability and future. Funds from this endowment will be utilized for Wabun's medium and long-term capital improvements.

Bill Olmsted and Dave Thompson Scholarship Fund

Bill Olmsted and Dave Thompson began as trip staff for Camp Wabun in 1966 and 1968. Lifelong educators dedicated to improving the world for others, their fund — seeded by the generosity of Philip Rockwood — focuses on access to Wabun for Temagami First Nation / Teme-Augama Anishnabai members, First Nation, and other children of color.

Wabun Foundation General Endowment Fund

These funds are not restricted, allowing for great flexibility in support of Wabun.

The Hawkeye — In Honor of Bill Green

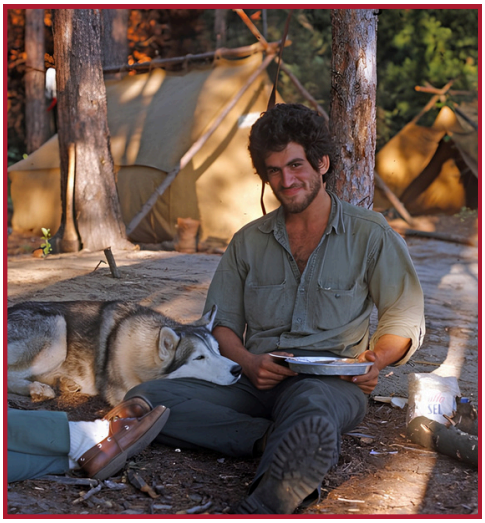

This year, the Wabun community came together to celebrate Bill Green — his many contributions across the decades, and the sixtieth anniversary of his very first summer at Wabun. In his honor, gifts arrived from across the Wabun family with a shared goal: a much-needed upgrade to the camp's hardest-working vessel.

That pontoon barge is the quiet backbone of camp operations, carrying campers, gear, and food orders across the water all season long. Thanks to your generosity, the barge is now powered by a new Yamaha 50-horsepower motor — already part of the smooth running of this past summer's season. And, at Bill's own suggestion, in the spirit of naming a vessel in his honor, the barge now carries the name that says it best: the Hawkeye. To everyone who gave in Bill's name: thank you. The Hawkeye will carry a little of the gratitude this community feels for him on every trip for years to come.

With gratitude to those who gave in Bill's honor:

THE RED CANOE SOCIETY

Some gifts arrive in a single season. Others reach across generations.

Founded in 2024, the Red Canoe Society celebrates the people who have written Wabun into their long-term plans — through a bequest, a trust, an IRA, or any other commitment made with the future in mind. It's the same instinct that clears a portage trail for the group coming up behind you.

A legacy gift costs nothing today. It simply makes sure that tomorrow's campers find the canoes waiting.
